WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION:

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA AND CENTRAL COASTAL AREAS:

Eureka Weather:

Dry weather is expected through early next week as a strong ridge aloft diverts storms away from the North Coast. Temperatures will gradually moderate through the week and this weekend.

Medford Weather:

The next possibility of precipitation will be Sunday night or Monday at the earliest and even then it won't be much. Given the dry air mass in place, it is unlikely any location will record any measurable precipitation.

Reno Weather:

High pressure will begin building overhead today, bringing diminishing ridge winds. Valley temperatures will remain well below average for one more day before warming to near average by Saturday. Valley inversions will intensify today which may result in decreased air quality conditions going into the weekend.

San Francisco Weather:

Cold northerly flow over the area will result in cold temperatures over the next two mornings. An upper ridge will move over the area by the weekend and temperatures will slowly warm up. Dry weather is expected to persist through the middle of next week.

WEATHER

CENTRAL CALIFORNIA AND SOUTHERN SAN JOAQUIN VALLEY

Sacramento Weather:

Winds continue to decrease today. Fair and dry conditions expected through early next week under strong high pressure. Cold overnight lows with the coldest temperatures this morning and Friday morning. A chance of precipitation across northern California is expected during the middle to late part of next week.

Hanford Weather:

An arctic air mass will blanket the Central California interior today with below freezing minimum temperatures and unseasonably chilly afternoon temperatures. A warming trend will begin Friday and continue through early next week as high pressure builds in from the Pacific. Dry weather can be expected for the next several days.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA:

Los Angeles Weather:

Clear skies and below normal temperatures will continue through the end of the week with sub-freezing temperatures at night and early morning hours. Warmer weather is expected next week as a large ridge of high pressure moves overhead and weak offshore flow continues.

Extreme Southwestern California Including Orange, San Diego, Western Riverside and Southwestern San Bernardino Counties:

Well below normal temps will continue into Friday with frost and freezing conditions likely in the valleys and deserts this morning and again tonight. A high pressure ridge will bring fair weather and gradual warming over the weekend into next week. Daytime temperatures will be above normal by early next week.

Southeast California Weather:

Cold air will remain in place through Friday with a warming trend beginning over the weekend and continuing into next week.
